

Judgment of facial attractiveness as an integration of facial parts

Chihiro Saegusa

Research Center for Advanced Science and Technology, The University of Tokyo

Human facial attractiveness plays an important role in interpersonal impression formation. Studies have suggested that each facial part differently contributes to holistic facial attractiveness; however, it remains unknown whether the differential contribution of facial parts is stable over time. In the current study, we examined how contributions of facial parts to whole facial attractiveness changes over time and gaze direction of the face.